

Who pays the real cost of our clothes?

Over the past 100 years, the proportion of a family's budget spent on clothes has fallen from around 15% to under 4%. This has been made possible largely through shifting production to countries where labour is cheap.

What is the bigger picture behind the low cost fashionable clothing that we enjoy?

We invite you to join us for a film which explores the real costs to the environment and on human lives of the world clothing trade.
